

Safe Call Form

Information needed by the people you want to protect you

Please give this information, or as much as possible, to your safe call people a couple days in advance of your play session so that they're prepared (able to have a full gas tank, arrangement for a sitter if they have kids... whatever things need to be taken care of if they need to go and rescue you).

Your real full name:

Your address at home:

Your home phone number:

Your cell phone number:

License plate and make of your car:

Driver's license number:

Name of your childcare provider:

Phone number and address of where your kids are located:

Name and phone number of your emergency contact person (one who can make medical decisions for you, if you are unable to):

Address of the play scene:

Full name of the play partner responsible for you:

Phone number where you can be reached at the play scene:

Times you will call and check in:

How long will the safe call person wait before sounding the alarm:

Time you will leave to go to play scene:

Time you are expected to return from the play scene:

“Clear” words you must use these during the call to confirm that everything is fine:

“Danger” words that mean you're in serious trouble:

Some of this information may seem to be a real invasion of your privacy, but consider...if you can't trust your safe call people with this information, should they be your safe call? The information you provide is for YOUR safety, assuming the worst-case scenario. Of course no one wants the worst to happen, but being unprepared and uninformed is danger waiting to happen. Your safe call people wish nothing to happen to you either, and they must know this information to provide the best safety for you.

Please be considerate to your safe call people, make your calls as close to the time you said you would so they don't worry, remembering the time frame you have set up. The police do not like responding to false alarms and it can be embarrassing to have them barge into an intense play scene.
